The official figures, published on the NIH website, show that the NIH spent more than $157.5 million to fund research into COVID-19. This includes $7.8 million spent on vaccine research and development, $48 million on related therapies, $7.1 million on research about the effects of the disease on pregnant women, and $19 million on infections that can be carried by the virus and transmitted from person to person. These figures don't include travel-related research money -- which is spent separately. The NIH also revealed that 60 research articles were published on COVID-19 as of March 21. The article with the most citations, in relation to the COVID-19 pandemic, was published in Cell. It linked severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV-2) to cytopathic effect and confirmed that SARS-CoV-2 causes COVID-19, the disease which has infected over 1 million people worldwide. The NIH is collaborating
