When it comes to our personal space, we spend a lot of time trying to avoid any bothersome body parts — be it the pudgy parts on a grapefruit or the legs of a beer pong table. What about the larger parts of our bodies? Although there are few things as common and as boring as a scalped haircut or badly-fitted pants, we're apt to overlook the areas that actually get in our way. For men, we commonly encounter a lot of body hair. From a little ginger stache to a hairy belly to a full-body beard — it's easily the most common body part that tends to get a lot of attention these days. It can be pretty easy to wax the nooks and crannies. But, try as you might, don't even try to forget about the main area — your upper body. There are all kinds of facts and advice floating around the Internet about how to get rid of the hair on your upper body. And, you'll find that a lot of these tips apply directly to women, too. Here are some of our favorites for removing unwanted hair. Yes, this gives you a distinct “manly” look but can be done in a more discreet and minimalistic way. An increasingly popular method for both men and women, electrolysis removes hair by using electricity. Although, in some cases, there is a bit of a down side to this method. If the hair is dark, the bright red marks can be quite noticeable, and the hair itself may grow back darker than before. For a more natural look, try waxing. Waxing is a handy method for depilating entire areas, but it's usually done every few months to keep up with the hair growth. Waxing usually works well for areas such as eyebrows, mustache, sideburns, and certain facial hair.
