A duel on the western plains, you have to dress up, lock guns, start shooting the bad guys, all of it to achieve the main goal: to be the best shooter in the west. DuelVox is an offline first-person shooter made in the style of Western. In this game there are many levels with various tasks, for their implementation you need ingenuity and dexterity, and sometimes even a strategy. To hit all the enemies, it's worth practicing on the targets, as the control is unusual, but quite understandable. You will have to strain both hemispheres of the brain, since you need to control each hand separately, aiming and getting clearly at the target, because the cartridges are limited, but this can be fixed by going to the store and pumping up weapons as you earn coins. Everything is done in voxel graphics with unobtrusive musical accompaniment, which is suitable for any age. For greater interest, we added exclusive stars and achievements, try to collect all of them;) And most importantly - defeat all the cowboys and become the best shooter in the wild west! Good luck in the game :) A: Westerns have been around since the 18th century, so there's no point in making this game. :) However, if you really want to make a western game, I suggest you look into Realm of the Mad God, available for both Steam and Windows Store. Only two weeks left to Double your gift This story was originally published by Grist and is reproduced here as part of the Climate Desk collaboration. New Hampshire had no stinking coal-fired power plants in the state prior to 2008. That was when the first of three Dominion Power coal plants opened. But that didn't keep the state from rolling out an ambitious environmental protection law that looks at banning new coal plants and prohibiting new coal imports as part of a statewide strategy to reduce emissions, energy costs, and emissions — in other words, as part of a growth strategy. In the past 12 years, New Hampshire has become the first state to ban coal plants and coal imports, the first to charge utilities for the “social costs” of new power plants, and the first to require utilities to get 20 percent of their power from renewable energy. The state's progress was documented in a new report from the Environmental Law Institute, a New York-based nonprofit environmental research center.
