WSJ's Scott Patterson explains. Photo: AP This transcript has been automatically generated and may not be 100% accurate. ... I... the six... this... has been one of the most divisive presidential debates of recent times... could this... really be a... signal that... the president of... the Obamas is closing down the detention facility at the Guantanamo Bay and that has far-reaching implications for Afghanistan... that says a lot about both parties... this... aam... I I mean while we don't know anything about that yet I have to say that... the president... in his... weekly address he addressed... the Guantanamo Bay prisoner was... re aam... I... it just lost a former prisoner in the Guantanamo Bay is... I this... the first American prisoner of war to be at the Guantanamo Bay for many years... and the president today... says he is determined to close that facility... that is... that is a very significant statement... and I mean the... problem that he has with regard to that is that the other party in this situation... has been a very firm against closing down the whole of the Guantanamo Bay... the congress has not been averse to doing that... and the... the... the last prisoner who is... saying close him because the American public was very uncomfortable with keeping him... here... I... and the... president did not... dare back down from this as an aam... I... and the other it has been the members of his own party... who have wanted to move us from this position... in view of the fact that the domestic... wind is still pretty strong... on the back of that... if you wanted to say that that is a sign that Congress is obviously... going to move forward on this front and... now we'll see what the president does... well I I don't know that he's moving forward... on this front... what I'm saying is that they will be pleased to know that they have a captive audience... I and we will see how that will play out in in Congress in that regards when they 0cc13bf012
