TicketBench Enterprise 6.16[H33T][superl] Setup V6.4.0.1Q: How to collect and export results of a SQL Server query to Excel? I have a store procedure which returning some results. I want to collect all of the results in a single table and export those to Excel. I'm not sure what's the best option for this. I was thinking to use Linq to SQL in C# and then write a windows form app to show the results in a table which then I'll export it. Is there any better way?
Thank you. A: you could use the OpenXML to export data. Have a look at the OpenXML Introduction part of Microsoft's website. This could also be some good start.
The relevance of the prelymphatic hematoma to the diagnosis of chronic lymphoedema. This study of 148 patients examined the site and morphology of the prelymphoedema and of the subcutaneous and muscular edema in patients with chronic lymphoedema, with or without acute lymphoedema. The lesions consisted of a blood swelling in the subcutaneous compartment, commonly associated with localized or general oedema. Following the rapid involution of the local edema, the blood showed a tendency to accumulate in the subdermal space. Thus, the prelymphoedema is an important diagnostic sign, the blood swelling involving the deep compartments and being very important for assessing the enlargement of the edematous limb.
