The game is set in historical Wisconsin and tells a story of people involved in an adventure of their lifetime. The game begins by a meeting point for Joel and his two best friends. It's an exciting weekend full of to-dos and lots of fun. As they begin to hike into the wild, all of a sudden, they split up to explore the forests. As Joel explores, he runs into strange goings-on and strange eeriness. But there's nothing you can do but keep going to find his friends, and maybe, you won't leave alone as you search. You'll encounter multiple puzzles, and you'll uncover memories along the way. This is a high adventure, psychological horror game set in multiple environments. Get ready for an experience filled with frightful situations and eerie moments. Visit the game at: Contact us if you have any questions or comments and good luck finding your way out of the Mt. High School! Facebook: Twitter: 1-09-13 Check out the EPIC story of my brand new game... LEFT ALONE: WE ALL HAVE TO LEAVE SOMETIMES! is a psychological horror game set in multiple believable environments. The story is about a man named Joel who is in psychological trauma while he tries to uncover the mystery behind his friend's disappearance. You play in First-Person as Joel Dent, ex-military officer, recent divorcee and still recovering from physical trauma. Joel and his best friends arrange a meeting point in the forests of Wisconsin, for a fun and adventurous weekend away camping but strange goings-on lead Joel to an abandoned school with a horrific past. The search for his friends uncovers horrors beyond his worst nightmares and Joel may wish he was "Left Alone". Left Alone was developed by just two people and took two long, hard years to develop. We hope

Random Levels

Cool and addictive shooting game filled with a lot of variety and challenges. Multiple Levels with a lot of power up. There are three main weapons which are great weapons. There is a bonus round. The Pokka Man Blast is a decent game for those who like to play mobile games. The game is a puzzle / brain game in which you blast the Pokka's "baddie" which usually takes the form of a giant object like a Tentacle Monster, Giant Bird or a wild ball. Oh and each level is randomly generated so there's a totally new set of obstacles to battles each time you try it. But the gameplay can be summed up in that you "choose" the weapon and then launch it, building up power and then launch it again. As you destroy Pokka baddies you earn (money) and new power ups. Each level starts out with you having 1 or 2 weapons and some power ups, but as you go through the levels you will unlock new weapons, new powers, new moves and as you're going down the screen you will hear if it is your turn or someone else's turn to go. It is suggested that you try and get as many points as you can as each level has a point goal and the points for that level is added to the overall score. Each Pokka blast consists of a weapon, a side bar, and a then a final thrust of the pokka and then the "pokka man" blasts away at the one or more Pokka's behind him. In between each level you can buy some cool Pokka power ups called "Pokkas", I've heard people say that there's like over 100 different Pokkas to get and each time you level you can buy 2 Pokkas that add a new power up to your current weapon which are each a certain amount of damage dealt and damage received. You can use Pokkas in every Pokka that you earn them from but beware, there's a maximum of Pokkas you can have at a time. The Pokkas cost an amount of money that you get from completing levels. Pokkas can be shared through Facebook or Twitter. [doublepokka\[3\].com](http://doublepokka[3].com) - Double Pokka Double Pokka in one screen! Heavy Weapon Shoot mini LP In Da Basick Like a lot of other geeks and nerds of all ages, I was eager for Friday morning so I could start my life-long love affair with Aeternum--a game that was only hinted at in Ross and Carrie's Planet Forward! game--Earthbound. With all of the interest I put into that game, we didn't get very far, which frustrated us. Years later, DigiLab and Ancient Ways were able to locate the Aeternum Questionnaire we planned to ask people for guesses on, in which we would pair the common responses up with the entries we would find on the game itself. We actually were pretty close on the first date for this game, so I am glad we decided to just go with it. If you are interested in the game anyway, we attempt to link out to every game of ours in addition to posting the entries we have, so please check it out. Also, be sure to check out our Aeternum Quest (real name) diary discussing some issues and explanations for Aeternum. Aeternum is not just a game—though it does come with a 16 page questionnaire to fill out and a 4 page diary to log your play session. The game is designed as a co-operative storytelling game, meaning that the players are not actually playing as characters in a story. Instead, they are playing as various gods, goddesses, and lesser figures of the setting of Aeternum. As a co-operative storytelling game, it is designed to be reactive in nature. As such, Aeternum is kind of hard to describe to people. There are some precedents out there, but Aeternum feels very unique at the same time that it draws on many different concepts from different areas. A previous blog discusses this a bit further, as well as includes links to some of the existing places you can go to learn more about some of the different elements of Aeternum. Aeternum is a game where each player is assigned a role and goal in the story of Aeternum. These roles and goals are assigned by the character of Aeternus, the God of Time, who is the single most powerful figure in the game. Each player's role and goal is completely individual in the story. While the Quests of the Gods players work together towards their larger goal of attaining the 13 pieces of Aeternum, each Quest
