Three-dimensional computer simulation of anastomotic passage of free jejunal loop in the duodenal stump in the dog. The posterior duodenal wall (PDW) was selectively protected from antrostomy during distal gastrectomy in dogs by placing a jejunal free loop around the posterior duodenal wall. In the present study, we performed three-dimensional reconstruction of the PDW in a dog after continuous distal gastrectomy using a coordinate system with the two axes of the duodenal stump and a new coordinate axis between the axes, and then created a computer simulation of the three-dimensional anastomosis of the jejunal loop at the PDW. This computer simulation made it possible to display images of the PDW and its surroundings, the luminal surface and wall of the jejunal free loop, and the anastomosis site as in actual laparotomy. These images revealed that the jejunal free loop easily reached the area, and a part of the intestinal loop looped around the part of the intestine in the duodenum anterior to the jejunum on the PDW. The PDW was thus protected from antrostomy in spite of the three-dimensional anastomosis of the jejunal loop with the PDW.)

Q: In order for a class to be returned by a method, do properties of the class have to be public and protected instead of private Why does the following code public class Human{ private String name; protected int age; public int test=10; } private void run() { Human h = new Human(); h.test=20; return h; } However if I make age public (change to private doesn't make any difference), class Human{ private String name; protected int age; public int test=10; } private void run() { Human h = new Human(); h.test=20; return h; } I get the following error : Error in console: A Human object must be initialized A: If you run your program with javac, you'll get an error like: test.java:9: error: no suitable constructor found for Human(Human h) ^ first possible conversion: Human to Human second possible conversion: Human to Character third possible conversion: Character to Character found possible conversion: Human to Object Human h = new Human(); ^ where E is a type-variable: E extends Human declared in class Human As you can see, there's only one constructor for Character, and one for Character. Thus, javac chose the constructor which takes Character as its parameter - and so age has to be protected. To explain it a bit, what happens is that since Human is abstract (and thus cannot be instantiated as a Human) it can only be instantiated as a child of Character or Object. Since it has no subclasses, it cannot be a child
